Dr Amoah calls for educational reforms

The Chief Executive Officer of Progeny Ventures International, Dr Kofi Amoah

Hitachi IT Innovation

Using Innovation to Help Support Sustainable Communities Globally.

The Chief Executive Officer of Progeny Ventures International, Dr Kofi Amoah, says the country's educational system should be reformed and tilted towards the self-interest rather than the interest of others.

He said the system should be built on a fundamental psychology of "Can-do-for-self, looking around us to appreciate and understand the natural materials in our ecosystem. Our scientists and technologists must research into our materials and identify their beneficial uses so that the local industry can adopt these in their production and manufacturing operations."

Government policy

"Some of such activities have started, but we need the support of government policy and funding to help push and accelerate them," he said at the 50th anniversary celebrations of the Assin Manso Senior High School in the Central Region.

It was on the theme: "Significant Milestone of Quality Education Delivery."

Dr Amoah said when imparted properly, education could become the key for the opening of doors to the arena of knowledge in various forms, including science, mathematics, history, geography, languages, music, accountancy and many other disciplines.

According to him, the beneficial aspects of education must encourage imagination, clarity of thought and action towards the creation and production of ideas as well as the products and services that must sustain life and expand the frontiers of human adventure and inquisitiveness.

"Through educational systems of training, research and manufacturing, we learn how to make things that are useful to sustain and promote healthy and happy living, but most importantly we learn to think better and the powerful processes of imagination and inspiration of the mind can help reveal how to do things better, how to handle and solve challenges and build better communities for ourselves," he said.

Dr Amoah said it was important to do an honest assessment and determine if Ghana's educational infrastructure, curricula and the products from our schools were properly aligned with the skills needed for the creation of the various production and manufacturing processes.

That, he said, was the only sure way to build a strong and expanding economy, adding that "we must curtail our dependency on foreign loans and aid as a matter of survival."

Dr Amoah donated GH¢10,000 to assist with school projects.

Headmistress

The Headmistress of the school, Madam Grace Ohemeng, announced that in the recent West African Senior School Certificate Examination (WASSCE), the school recorded a 95-per cent success rate, with more than 50 per cent of the candidates qualifying for admission to universities and other tertiary institutions, especially the Kwame Nkrumah University of Science and Technology (KNUST) where they had been offered courses such as Engineering, Agriculture and Medicine.

Ms Ohemeng appealed to the old students to strengthen their membership drive to form a solid association that would be capable of putting up bungalows and classroom blocks for the school.

The Chairman of the AMASS Old Students Association, Mr Augustine K. Abankwah, cut the sod for the construction of a GH¢600,000 examination pavilion, which is being financed by the association.
